BLIZZARD BURIES ISLAND

State of emergency declared as 10,000 lose power.

BY HAYLEY DUFFY

A historic blizzard battered the Island this week. Trees toppled from the weight of the snow, power lines were downed, roads were impassable, and hundreds of thousands across the state, and as many as 10,000 people here on the Island, had no power or heat, and some wouldn't see reprieve for days. By Wednesday, thousands of Islanders still had not seen power restored. This storm was a nor'easter, which satellites showed as a fierce spiral that blanketed all of the Northeast at once, and produced a blizzard that many won't forget. Some have likened this weather system to the blizzard of '78, which dumped 27 inches of snow in Boston and became known as the storm of the century. Meteorologists in Providence and the South Coast reported record snowfall that surpassed the blizzard Continued on A23

Digging out of the aftermath

Crews work nonstop to clean up and restore power. BY EUNKI SEONWOO

After getting walloped by a blizzard that brought howling winds and heavy snowfall across Martha's Vineyard, the long, grinding process of digging out and cleaning up is underway.

But as power restoration and snow removal continue, Vineyarders are wary of the rain that started Wednesday afternoon, and forecasts of another dusting of snow this week on top of the nearly two feet of white stuff already dumped on the Island.

The Vineyard will see a "wintry mix" of rain and snow, but a meteorologist at the National Weather Service in Norton said the rain would not likely pose issues for the Island, and the hope is that the small amount of precipitation can be absorbed into the snow already on the ground. As of late Wednesday morning, the precipitation in the next few days was expected to bring little to no snow accumulation. Still, the Island is prone to flooding at Five Corners, and there were work crews working Wednesday to try to get ahead of the threat by clearing large piles of blackened snow with front-end loaders.

Publisher's note

Braving Monday's blizzard and foraging for power and internet, our team at The Times worked around the clock to keep you updated on this historic snowstorm through our online coverage. On Wednesday, we were working against all odds to get this Thursday's print edition delivered to TCI Press in Seekonk. We regret to say this issue may arrive at your mailbox on the Island on Friday due to disruptions at the Rhode Island trucking terminal that brings the paper to the Island. You will notice that this edition is arriving in one section rather than our usual two for news and Community/Calendar. All of the elements of both coverage areas are still in your paper, just combined into one 24-page section to make it easier on our printers. It turns out, we like the way one section feels, and we would like to hear your feedback, as this may be a process we return to.

We realized most of you do not know our production process, which involves an all-week news-gathering that ends at exactly 3 pm on Wednesdays before we ship electronic files to TCI Press, where an experienced team runs the paper through a four-color printer. In the TCI parking lot, they were reporting 39 inches of snow, which had to be plowed. From TCI, two pallets stacked with approximately 3,500 copies of The MV Times are brought to a trucking depot in Warwick, R.I. Delays in trucking ran up and down the East Coast from New York to the tip of Cape Cod, which was paralyzed by the blizzard. But the papers were expected to arrive Friday, and we will be getting them out to the post offices across the Island and into the stores where they are sold. But please remember, you can always read all of the coverage online. Thanks for your patience, and a hats-off to the whole team at The MV Times for getting the paper to you. It is worth noting that the venerable Boston Globe failed to print on Monday. We, however, are proud to be getting this paper to you this week as best we can. Thank you for your patience, and thank you for your support.

An aerial drone survey to determine the Island's deer population size and distribution.

MassWildlife collects feedback on hunting regulations

The state Division of Fisheries and Wildlife, better known as MassWildlife, held virtual public hearings Monday on two proposal packages to permanently formalize emergency deer-hunting regulations and make changes to other hunting regulations.

Eve Schlüter, acting director of MassWildlife, led the hearings over Zoom after the brunt of the recent blizzard passed through Massachusetts. Martin Feehan, a deer biologist for the state department who recently came to the Island to discuss off-season opportunities for Island hunters, provided a brief summary of all of the regulations under discussion.

The initial hearing covered regulations that were passed through an emergency order and are currently active. Now the department wants to consider whether to make the rules, which include an extension of the winter deer season into February, as well as a 10-day early season in September, permanent.

The emergency regulations pertain to Martha's Vineyard, Nantucket, and the Elizabeth Islands, also known as Wildlife Management Zones (WMZs) 13 and 14, all of which experience deer overabundance that contributes to habitat damage, beach erosion, spread of tick-borne diseases, and increased vehicle collisions. MassWildlife's goal is to maintain deer density at 12 to 18 deer per mile across the state, whereas WMZs 13 and 14 see 50 to 70 deer per square mile in areas where hunting is allowed. That number is closer to 100 in areas closed to hunting.

The emergency regulations, which also remove the visibility requirement for harvested deer in transport as well as the on-Island deer-check requirement, were enacted late last year. Deer harvested on Martha's Vineyard may instead be checked in at stations off-Island.

Feehan said not only is there significant impact through tick-borne diseases and the allergy to mammalian products, alpha-gal syndrome, but there are "impacts directly on agriculture, particularly on Martha's Vineyard, where there are more farms that have not yet been fenced." It directly impacts the local food system, he said.

He added that this year's extended winter deer season, which began on Jan. 1 and ended Feb. 14 through the emergency regulations, was very successful. There were 763 deer taken in the fall harvest on Martha's Vineyard, which is the ninth highest on record. And on top of 171 taken in the winter season, there were a total of 934 harvested this season on the Island, the second highest on record.

The second hearing focused on five proposed regulation changes, which, pertaining to the Island, would expand the youth deer hunt to two more days, allow only synthetic and non-deer-based lures to prevent the spread of a fatal deer illness called chronic wasting disease, and allow Massachusetts Environmental Police to substitute confirmation numbers on harvested deer for physical metal seals, to enable more remote reporting.

The hearings were a means to collect feedback, but those not able to attend can submit comments by email or mail until Monday, March 9, at 5 pm. There is an online form on the public hearings page, or comments can be sent to MassWildlife Field Headquarters, 1 Rabbit Hill Road, Westborough, MA 01581.

These hearings didn't cover several bills in the state legislature, such as universal access to more efficient and accessible crossbows (currently limited to people who suffer from a disability) and the reduction of setback limits, to try to encourage an increase in hunters. Those are statutory limitations, all of which would need legislative action to change.

Wasque to temporarily close for work against invasive beetles

The Wasque reservation on Chappaquiddick will soon be closed for at least a month so the Trustees of Reservations can conduct mitigation efforts against Southern pine beetles.

The Trustees, which owns the nature preserve, announced in a press release it will begin thinning Wasque's mature pitch pine forests on Feb. 28 in a project funded by a $75,000 grant from the MassWildlife Habitat Management Grant Program.

"Without this work, we run a greater risk of an infestation," Darci Schofield, Islands director for the Trustees, said in the release. "Wasque's pitch pine forests are currently very dense, creating ideal conditions for the Southern pine beetle to spread and kill many mature trees."

Southern pine beetles are insects that have become a scourge on Vineyard woodlands. The females of the species chew into pine trees and carve tunnels inside to lay eggs and release pheromones to attract males, a process that ultimately overwhelms the

New developments unfolding at the high school

High school building gets crucial funding approval, and finalists for principal were named.

BY SARAH SHAW DAWSON

The long-awaited, final costs were nailed down for the Martha's Vineyard Regional High School (MVRHS) building project after a state funding source unanimously approved it on Wednesday morning. The milestone for the project comes just one week after two finalists were named as the next potential principal of the school.

Both were huge steps amid the changing educational landscape that Islanders have witnessed this year, and build on other recent leadership turnover. Earlier this month, a new superintendent, Jaime Curley, was chosen to lead all local public schools by the All-Island School Committee, pending successful contract negotiations.

At $333.5 million, the planned renovation and addition of the Martha's Vineyard Regional High School (MVRHS) is a record-breaker. The reimbursement of about $71 million, while lower than the $78 million estimated by MVRHS building committee members, is still a significant win for the school committee.

Years of planning and the sanctity of the building project itself were hinged on the approval by the Massachusetts School Building Authority (MSBA) at a board of governors meeting on Wednesday morning, with the next binding decision to be made by Islanders themselves.

On June 2, locals will vote on funding the project, a portion of which will be paid by Vineyard taxpayers over a 30-year period, based on a funding formula decided years ago. If approved, the school, which is in significant disrepair, will start renovations as soon as the summer of 2027.

The approval for reimbursement by the MSBA was an essential piece of the larger puzzle. "It's definitely a big milestone," Superintendent of Island Schools Richard ("Richie") Smith said.

"Now the work is to get the message out, and hopefully we get our approval from the Island, which is just as, or more, important," Smith added in an interview with The Times.

Another heavy-hitting decision came last week when the search for a permanent high school principal was narrowed down to two candidates. Islanders can meet them next Wednesday and Thursday, when they each tour the school that one of them may soon oversee.

Dennis Mahony, the former principal of Winchester High School, and Bryan Lombardi, the principal of Stoneham High School, have been named as the final picks, down from 13 candidates, for principal of MVRHS.

"Our two finalists are seen as possessing the skills, values, and vision to lead MVRHS as its next principal," Smith, the current superintendent, stated in a letter he sent to students and parents last week when he announced the final candidates.

Mahony became a principal in 2016 when he was hired to head up Winchester High School in Massachusetts. He held the position for nearly a decade. In his district, he provided stability and a long tenure at a time of high turnover for principals. He was previously the assistant principal at Wilmington High School.

The other candidate, Lombardi, is the current principal of Stoneham High School, outside Boston, where he's served since 2019. Before programs in their schools. Mahony will tour the Vineyard school on Wednesday, March 4, and Lombardi on Thursday, March 5, with a public community meeting following from 3:30 to 5 pm each day.

Neither of the potential said. He noted that other recent principal hires moved to the Island to work and secured housing along the way, or are in the process of doing so, namely Kate Campbell, principal at the Edgartown School, and Kate Squire, the Chilmark School principal.

principals are Island residents, but if one of them gets the position, that person will be a Vineyarder — donning in the school colors of purple and white, and navigating the ebbs and flows of student and teacher needs in a new community, along with a new high school, if all upcoming votes are approved.

"I'm so happy with the quality of the candidates who applied. It was tough getting them down to two, but they're both very exciting finalists," Smith noted. He said what stuck out most about both was "their enthusiasm for the position."

Considerations like housing, their relocation to the Island, and familiarizing themselves with the community would all come in time, Smith

The final pick will also be tasked with the uniqueness of overseeing one of the only educational hubs for Island teenagers. The Martha's Vineyard Public Charter School also hosts high school students, but usually fewer than 10 in each graduating class, making MVRHS the central meeting point for ninth through 12th grade students.

Those students are a diverse group: More than one-third speak another language besides English at home. Many of them will also be enrolled in classes while the building itself undergoes extensive planned renovations that will span multiple years.

The new hire will take over from Sean Mulvey, who has been serving in the role on an interim basis, and will go back to his job as a counselor at the end of this school year. His insight, Smith said, will be crucial for whoever next fills the principal position.

While the high school was once marred by frequent leadership changes, it had a constant in Sara Dingeldy, who was the principal for nine years before Mulvey, and now works in the central office, assisting students Island-wide. When the search began in December, school committee members expressed their intention to find another long-term leader.

The committee put together the MVRHS Principal Search Committee, made up of members of various towns, teachers, and student representatives, and tasked them with finding a new leader — one who would stand the test of time and provide stability to the Island's most populated school.

"We'll definitely make it work," Smith said. "There's a cocoon of support around them." MVT plants. The beetles have encroached on various parts of the Island, and in December, forced the Sheriff's Meadow Foundation to close trails in West Chop Woods in Vineyard Haven because of a large number of trees killed by the beetles. They have also been found in some residential areas. More than 2,000 pitch pine and white pine trees were infected or deemed at risk, and were cut down, at the 69-acre Phillips Preserve, near Lake Tashmoo in Tisbury, in 2024. And there have been infestations found in Manuel F. Correllus State Forest.

While the Trustees of Reservations has not detected the beetles on Wasque, the conservation group is removing pitch pines on about 28 acres as a proactive measure to protect the habitat. Sheriff's Meadow also thinned the woods at the Caroline Tuthill Preserve in Edgartown to enable the mature pine forest to survive a potential outbreak.

While the reserve is closed, foresters will reduce tree density on the property to "healthy recommended levels" on 28 acres of land. The release stated that smaller branches and crowns will be masticated onsite, while larger logs will be "stacked in designated areas at least 50 feet from boundaries and roads to decompose naturally."

Signs will be posted at the reservation and trail entrances to let people know about the temporary closure.

Bret Stearns becomes full-time Chilmark Police officer

A recognizable face has fully joined the Chilmark Police Department.

The Chilmark Select Board unanimously voted on Tuesday to approve Bret Stearns as a full-time police officer in the town.

Stearns has actually worked for the department on a part-time basis since 1996, but he said the "timing was never right" to take the leap. The right time came, however, after Officer Bill Fielder was hired by the West Tisbury Police Department in December, and a position opened up; Stearns submitted an application.

"I'm excited to do it. It was the right move at the right time," Stearns said.

The shift means Stearns will no longer be director of natural resources for the Wampanoag Tribe of Gay Head (Aquinnah), a position he's held for more than 30 years. But he said the tribe is in "great hands," and he'll still be involved with the department as a contractor for environmental grants. Stearns will also be leaving his volunteer positions in Aquinnah as deputy shellfish constable and deputy harbor master by July 1, although he can still help the departments.

Stearns said Chilmark Police has great people with varying expertise, despite being a small department. He's often been called upon for issues regarding the environment and wildlife.

"I'm still going to do those things, just doing it with a Chilmark uniform," he said.

Chilmark Police Chief Sean Slavin was not immediately available for comment.

SSA rep interviews reset

The finalists' interviews for the Island's next Steamship Authority board representative have been delayed following the powerful blizzard that hit the Island.

The Dukes County Commissioners announced in a press release that the public interviews, which were scheduled for Feb. 25 at the Martha's Vineyard Hebrew Center in Vineyard Haven, have been "postponed to allow sufficient time for conditions to normalize." It will now be held on Tuesday, March 3, at 4 pm. People can also view the interview remotely on Zoom, which is available on the county's calendar, dukescounty.gov.

The finalists are Gail Barmakian, Cameron Naron, and Ted Gavin. Each candidate brings a different set of experiences to the table. Barmakian, a lawyer, currently chairs the Oak Bluffs wastewater commission, and previously served five terms on the town's select board. Naron is the director of the federal Office of Maritime Security, and previously served in the U.S. Coast Guard, retiring with the rank of captain. Gavin is a certified turnaround professional, a role that helps stabilize troubled companies. He also serves on the boards of several nonprofits, including the Martha's Vineyard Camp Meeting Association, and as treasurer of the Hebrew Center.

Suggestions for interview questions are being accepted at questions@dukescounty.org until 12 pm on March 2. There will not be a public comment period following the interview.

Edgartown Democrats to pick delegates for state convention

The Edgartown Democratic Committee announced that it will elect four delegates and four alternate members to represent the town at the 2026 Massachusetts State Democratic Convention.

Registered and preregistered Democrats in Edgartown who are at least 16 years old by Saturday, March 29, can vote, and can also be elected as delegates or alternates during the caucus, a press release from the committee said. The committee scheduled a Zoom meeting Saturday, March 7, at 1:30 pm to choose the representatives.

The convention is in-person on Friday, May 29, and Saturday, May 30, at the DCU Center in Worcester.

"Youth (age 16 to 35), individuals with disabilities, people of color, veterans, and members of the LGBTQ community not elected as delegates or alternates are encouraged to apply to be add-on delegates at the caucus," the press release said. MVT

Bleak midwinter depression

Publisher's Note: This has been one of the hardest winters on the Island in memory. What's made it uniquely difficult is a string of local tragedies that descended upon the Island at the start of the winter and that were followed by unusually frigid temperatures and a harsh set of winter storms. And now it can feel like this week's blizzard, well, just buried us all.

Faced with digging out from under two feet of heavy snow for many days and spring nowhere in sight, we wanted to highlight what can be serious psychological conditions and physical challenges that can accompany bleak midwinters like this one. One condition is known as seasonal affective disorder, or SAD.

We are fortunate on this Island to have access to mental health counseling for this malady, and at The Times we are fortunate to have the regular contributions of Dr. Charles Silberstein, medical director at the Island Counseling Center within Martha's Vineyard Community Services, to help us understand it. We would like to offer excerpts from an essay by Silberstein from 10 years ago that feels as relevant as ever. Now as then, Silberstein wants our readers to remember that Islanders are almost twice as likely as residents in the rest of Massachusetts (or the U.S.) to suffer from depression — about 14 percent of the residents of Martha's Vineyard struggle with it. And, he added, SAD is still very prevalent, though there are successful treatments for it that seem to be improving in recent years.

This week, Silberstein said, "I have been having great success with light visors. Some people just can't sit still long enough for the light box. I recommend the Luminette 3. For full SAD, I usually recommend one hour per day of light therapy ... I hope my previous writing will help people understand what they are going through and know treatment is always evolving, and that help is available."

BY CHARLES SILBERSTEIN

Why do I always feel blue in the winter? I don't want to go on an antidepressant. Do light boxes really work? How do I choose one? Is there anything else that I can do?

During the first hour of every evaluation, I ask whether seasonal mood changes occur. Often the answer is "No," or even, "I like the dark days of winter." And often, I hear this: "Doesn't everyone feel lower in the winter?" Well, the answer is that about 20 percent of people will experience some seasonal blues. About 6 percent of us will experience more severe mood changes, or seasonal affective disorder (SAD). The American Psychiatric Association regards SAD as a variant of major depressive disorder and bipolar disorder. SAD occurs in about 1.4 percent of people in Florida, and about 9.9 percent in Alaska. Though there is some controversy about this, there appears to be a direct relationship between latitude and incidence of SAD; women are about four times as likely to get it. Being younger, having a mood disorder, and having a family history are all factors that increase the risk.

What causes it?

The exact mechanism is unknown, but it appears to be triggered by the decreased seasonal light. While cold weather, winter isolation, and underemployment no doubt contribute to the winter blues, they are not the cause of SAD. It appears that the excessive production of melatonin that occurs in dim light or darkness, as well as a different pattern of serotonin regulation, may be factors. People with SAD need much more light than others to inhibit the brain's production of melatonin. And some people with SAD may have trouble making enough vitamin D.

What to do?

I appreciate your preference not to go on medication. Medications all have side effects and unknown long-term consequences. While ultimately that may be necessary in more severe cases, starting with more natural treatments probably makes more sense. Here are my suggestions:

- Get a light box. Light is a powerful antidepressant. In a recent research study, light therapy was found to be as effective as Prozac at treating nonseasonal depression. If you search for "seasonal light box" at Amazon, a bunch pop up. The most important thing is that the box is 10,000 lux. Full-spectrum bulbs provide a nice light, but the important ingredient is light intensity. You will see blue and white lights. It is unclear if one is superior. Some people find the blue lights tend to be more stimulating. Beyond that, the choice is mostly stylistic. Some people want a small portable light, others might want a desk lamp. There is even a light visor that can work while people move around.

- Sit close to the light — 16 to 24 inches. There is an exponential dropoff in light intensity with distance from the light. Just think about how light fans out from its source. The closer you sit, the more intense and therefore effective the light is. Most people use it in the morning. Others use it twice a day. Some people find that it really helps evening energy when used late in the day.

One word of caution: Bright light interferes with the production of melatonin — the sleep hormone. If you use it late in the day, it may interfere with sleep.

- Get your vitamin D level checked, and if it is low, take vitamin D supplements.
- Get psychotherapy. Cognitive therapy has been studied for SAD, and it works. Other therapies have been studied for depression, and they are quite effective as well.
- Consider a negative air ionizer in your bedroom. Negatively charged particles in the sleep environment can help mood and SAD.
- Consider medication. Serotonin reuptake inhibitors like Zoloft, Celexa, Lexapro, Prozac, and a bunch of others are probably the most effective medication for SAD. Others, such as Wellbutrin and Provigil, may help as well. Medication can be safe, easy, and effective.

Dr. Charles Silberstein is a psychiatrist on staff at Martha's Vineyard Hospital and at Island Counseling Center, where he is the medical director. He is board-certified in general, addiction, and geriatric psychiatry. He writes regularly about issues Islanders have with mental health. This essay was first published in The Times on Dec. 28, 2016, and excerpts are being reprinted with permission. You can read the full essay online here: <https://www.mvtimes.com/2016/12/28/mind-deal-seasonal-depression/>.

Release contract details of SSA senior advisor

To the Editor:

The scathing report from the Office of the Inspector General [OIG] on the Steamship Authority operations did not spare any words when evaluating the performance of Mr. Robert Davis, the general manager at the time of the report, and the prospects of keeping him on staff after he was no longer GM. The OIG expressed "concern over the board's retention of the outgoing general manager for 18 months as a senior advisor. The board agreed to give the outgoing manager significant responsibilities, ensuring his continued influence at a time when the new general manager is trying to chart a new course for the agency. Further, the broad responsibilities enumerated in the senior advisor's employment include areas in which the outgoing general manager has not demonstrated strength. The board's agreement with the outgoing general manager appears to be far more generous to the outgoing general manager than to the Steamship Authority."

In addition to collecting the same salary that he did as GM (with raises), Mr. Davis is getting paid vacation time, health benefits for him and his wife, an SUV with all expenses paid, and other perks. While his agreement is through April 2027, it extends indefinitely unless a six-month notice is provided. Therefore, we, the ticketholders, are paying for two GMs for the foreseeable future.

There is a clause, however, in the senior advisor employment agreement, which allows the Steamship Authority and Mr. Davis to part ways before April 2027. If this is exercised, Mr. Davis gets a full year of pay plus unused vacation. The Steamship Authority, however, can terminate the agreement due to "willful misconduct in the performance of the employee's assigned duties" and not have to pay for the year. There is plenty of evidence in the OIG report to at least warrant the discussion.

Our attempts to obtain a status of Mr. Davis' employment have been stonewalled by the Steamship Authority board as "personnel matters." We believe the public has a right to know, and hope to see it addressed at the next board meeting.

Islanders under emergencies

To the Editor:

What a coincidence, both Martha's Vineyard and Puerto Vallarta fell under an emergency order to shelter on the same day.

On vacation in Puerto Vallarta, Mexico, I was oblivious to future events. I dressed for a run on the soccer fields near my Airbnb, but upon arrival, I noticed a car burning in the middle of the road of a major highway into downtown Puerto Vallarta. No traffic or people were around to watch it — weird? On my run, I heard explosions, and the sky began to darken. Then I heard loud explosions coming from the direction of my return. A group of locals were watching a car burning, and I asked, "Que pasa?" I was told that a cartel chief had been killed and the cartel was "making a statement."

Around 11 am, it started for real. The sky was turning black, and explosions of the gas tanks of cars everywhere had started. After about an hour, the cartel started bombing the more than 150 convenience stores in P.V., using masked young men on very fast motorcycles.

At 3 pm, the stores were still burning, but no police or fire officials were visible. I was told they were the only people the cartel wanted to kill. And it became eerily quiet for the rest of the day. No cars, no people — the silence was unreal, and the shops were burning out quietly and alone.

On Monday morning, the world was informed that "El Mencho," the drug lord kingpin, had been killed by the Mexican military. The quiet prevailed as cleanup of cars and buses started; the stores kept smoldering. All flights had been canceled, no local buses or taxis. Hotels were in lockdown, and stores and restaurants were closed: an international ghost town.

It's Tuesday, life has begun; people, cars, and flights have resumed. But it's not the same.

The snow on the Vineyard will melt, spring will arrive, and this will all be a memory. A quite unforgettable one.

ESSAY

BY KATE FEIFFER

The Vineyard in the Epstein files

The Department of Justice posted a website in December that allows anyone to search the millions of pages of partially redacted documents of what is now widely referred to as the Epstein files. Like many news organizations across the country, The Times decided to take a look. We wanted to find out about the depth of Jeffrey Epstein's connection to the Vineyard, and I offered to dig around in the files.

Of course, the island that Epstein is mostly associated with was his private island in the Caribbean. An island where the powerful men who visited him are currently claiming that they didn't know he was involved in the sex-trafficking of young women and children. Epstein was first convicted in 2008 of procuring a child under the age of 18 for prostitution. In 2019, he was arrested for sex-trafficking, and he died in prison, reportedly by suicide, that August.

My first surprise, when I went on the Department of Justice site to do this search, was that I was asked to confirm that I was over the age of 18. This is obviously not something that the young women, some so young they may more appropriately be described as girls, who were brought to Epstein's island needed proof of.

Rather than looking into Epstein's friends and associates with ties to Martha's Vineyard who are being deposed by the House Oversight Committee — think Les Wexner, who last year acquired the Blue Heron Farm for a record estate price of $37 million, and Bill and Hillary Clinton — I focused my search on matters specifically Vineyard-related. I searched the files for "Martha's Vineyard," "Vineyard," and "MV." And then, because I was curious to see how another high-profile island, where presidential candidates and power players tend to convene, fared, I did a search for "the Hamptons."

It's clear that Epstein visited the Vineyard, as did Epstein's longtime partner Ghislaine Maxwell, but it doesn't seem like he spent a lot of time here. There are emails from people mentioning they were on the Vineyard; there are emails from people wondering if he wanted to stop by the Island. Some of these were clearly from short-term visitors, and others from seasonal residents. The only person I could find who spent time with Epstein on the Vineyard who has also been arrested (brought into police custody and later released) for a crime related to Epstein is Andrew Mountbatten-Windsor, the former Prince Andrew. Mountbatten-Windsor came to the Vineyard at least twice in the 1990s, and during one of those visits, he was a guest at a birthday party that Epstein attended.

The search for "Martha's Vineyard" — apostrophe included — turned up nothing. Once I dropped the apostrophe, nine documents appear, including a flight manifest and a copy of a 2005 American Express bill with a $354 charge for "Vineyard Coach and Limousines," and a much lesser charge at a place not often associated with the Island's high rollers, Trader Fred's.

There are also four copies of the same email exchange between Epstein and a New York-based restaurateur, who emailed Epstein to say he had just landed "in marthas vineyard [sic]." In this email exchange, the restaurateur said he wanted to get to his hotel to use a landline to call Epstein. He also wanted to know whether Epstein preferred to have their conversation on a landline.

Many entries appear using the search for "Vineyard." The majority of what comes up from this search references other vineyards, not what we think of as "the Vineyard." However, there are a number of exchanges with or about seasonal Chilmark resident and legal and local provocateur Alan Dershowitz, Epstein's former lawyer, who has also represented Donald Trump — many of them just noting, "Alan is on the Vineyard" and "He asked if you might want to stop by the Vineyard ... ?"

Included in the Vineyard search of the files is an email from an entrepreneur and venture capitalist, with the subject heading "Poor peoples problems" (ironic of course), that reads, "Which reminds me... if you want to pick us up at Martha's Vineyard on Saturday [sic] on your way to Boston you could meet my dogs. :-)." A 2013 email was sent to Epstein with the subject line: "Caroline Kennedy Selling 93 Acres of Martha's Vineyard," to which Epstein replied in all caps, "BORING."

Epstein's "BORING" turned into a historic land conservation deal with Sheriff's Meadow Foundation and the Martha's Vineyard Land Bank. Alas, it's not at all boring to have more than 300 acres of pristine land forever in conservation for the public to enjoy.

Is it upsetting that it's not surprising that Epstein visited the Vineyard? Of course.

What may also be surprising is that he wasn't more of a presence on the Island. And yes, it appears he was more inclined toward the Hamptons, which is why it is the New York Post, and not The MV Times, that recently ran the headline, "Jeffrey Epstein masterminded 'girls weekends' in ritzy Hamptons with weird overnight stays: emails."

While it would have been nice not to find any entries linking him to the Vineyard, I guess we'll have to settle for "BORING."

 To Existing TZBL 09.03.02.04 - There shall be no removal of existing vegetation within a Special Way Zone other than to keep the Special Way clear of debris and overgrown vegetation, except as permitted as part of a Special Permit or where the width of a Special Way Zone extends beyond a pre-existing fence or beyond where a fence may be allowed.

LEGAL NOTICES TISBURY

Add - To keep clear the travel way of vegetation the following method may be used for administrative approval from the Planning Board:
For sections of the Special Way less than 12 feet wide, any tree located within the following dimensions may be removed with on-site approval from a Planning Board representative. Additionally, the Applicant must obtain written permission from the property owners of the land where the trees are located and provide it to the Planning Board before any cutting.
The measurement begins vertically from the outer edge of the level travel way:
 • Starting Height: From 3 feet high.
 • Outward: Extending up to 1 foot 6 inches horizontally.
 • Ending Height: Reaching a maximum vertical height of 13 feet 6 inches from the travel way.
Using the above methodology, the removal of the trees that impede the Special Way's travel ability will leave the root ball and stump intact to avoid destabilizing any embankment. Or take any action relative thereto.

Stillpoint's
refettorio, or community
suppers.

THE WINTER TABLE

THOMAS BENA

BY NICOLE GALLAND

In the aftermath of the Island's weathering a historic blizzard — that first trapped us in our homes, and then dragged us from them in the labor of digging out — what better way is there to celebrate or seek solace in community than to break bread together?

Every Sunday evening through the end of March, something remarkable is happening in the woods of West Tisbury, regardless of snowdrifts: Stillpoint's community suppers. Attendees of all ages enter the gently lit barn to find two long tables adorned with tablecloths, candles, and scores of table settings. People nibble on hors d'oeuvres as they chat leisurely with fellow diners. The bountiful, locally sourced dinner accommodates alpha-gal syndrome and other food sensitivities, offering vegan, vegetarian, and meat-based entrées; diners eat with live background music; after the meal, as servers clear the plates and deliver desserts to the table, the lighting shifts to highlight the musicians, who perform with guest artists joining in.

The whole evening Continued on A12

THE WINTER TABLE

DEB KLEIN

Continued from A11 is free of charge. (Donations are welcome.) Even more impressive, the whole evening is upcycled.

"We use a lot of upcycled food at the Charter School, where I'm running the kitchen," explains Betsy Carnie, the cook, "so we've tapped into networks of food rescue. People bring things to the school and ask: 'Do you want this?' We get produce from the farms that is in excess — more than they'll sell before it rots."

Another common source of food is the "mispick," meaning "mistaken and picked up." Carnie explains, "Things come to Cronig's as mispicks — for example, they have no place on the shelf, they have no way to itemize it, etc. — and they don't want the expense of returning it, so they offer it to us."

The team works with Cronig's because it's right across the road from the Charter School; Carnie takes students with her to collect the food, which gives the students an up-close understanding of the supply chain. The food is prepared at the Charter School, because Stillpoint doesn't have a kitchen: "Using a kitchen that does exist is using what we already have to make something more for more people."

"About a third of the food in this country is wasted, for various reasons, according to the FDA [Food and Drug Administration]," Carnie continues. "At the Charter School, we have morning meetings, and we discuss this. First and foremost, consider the environmental-justice element: avoiding waste when we can think of joyful and creative and exciting and delicious ways to reincarnate foods."

Each week, just before dinner is served, Carnie tells the assembled diners the origin story of that evening's food. Since she doesn't know ahead of time what she'll have to work with, the menu is serendipitous, but she enjoys the creative challenge. The mismatched plates, silverware, napkins, and candlestick holders are sourced from the Dumptique, adding to the whimsical vibe of the event. And the catch-as-catch-can seating encourages strangers to get to know one another.

These community suppers are the shared brainchild of Willy Mason and Ben Robinson, two Islanders who independently had a vision of providing free food in a setting designed to foster community; for Mason, music was an intrinsic part of the vision. Each of them reached out to Thomas Bena at Stillpoint, who connected them. The rest is history. Very recent history, in fact: They began planning this past December, and held their first supper in early February. "We just decided to jump right in and let it develop on its own," says Mason.

"It's a thrown-together thing," agrees Robinson, Carnie's partner. "But we've been throwing together dinners for years, so it's a skill set."

"It's the practice of embracing imperfection," says Carnie. "We invite people to see us in our state of figuring it out, to witness imperfection, and embrace it, and enjoy it."

Robinson was initially intrigued by the work of an esteemed Italian chef, Massimo Bottura, who endorsed refettorio: the concept of simple, elegant, free meals using upcycled food, served in community. "These have popped up around major cities," Robinson says. "We're doing our version of it. We wouldn't be able to do it without the Stillpoint staff, who have the space, and handle a level of logistics, like the ticketing. And you need a certain number of volunteers. It's a mix. Maybe half our volunteers are Charter School students, but we also had a man in his 70s, which is kind of the idea: getting different people to mix." The diners who stay until the end of the evening are likely to spontaneously help with breaking down the room.

The music is provided by Mason, a beloved and well-established local singer and songwriter, and whichever friends of his are available. "There's not really a plan," says Robinson. "The music is as upcycled as the food. As much as the food is going to be a mystery, the music is too. The whole dinner is so West Tisbury, in a way that makes me love West Tisbury."

Mason notes, "We're still brainstorming wildly about what else we can bring into it, to keep feeding it. It feels like a huge opportunity to have people together under one roof with a sense of comfort and optimism and mutual care, and I'm excited to see where it leads, and what it might inspire elsewhere. We're playing into a tradition that's been going on a long time, and trying to experiment with open minds about how it can be most aptly applied to the present moment. We welcome comments and suggestions and collaborators."

Deb Klein, program coordinator at Stillpoint, says, "Stillpoint's mission is an educational one, so we love that Betsy tells diners about the food, how she sourced it, what she does with it, and how upcycling can really benefit the community. It's a great learning experience, as well as an amazing community vibe."

The team would like to see the project expand in the direction of accessibility, especially for families with food insecurity and older people dealing with isolation. "How do you get people who don't have a vehicle is a hurdle. There's no bus service," says Robinson, "so there are people who don't have access. We've talked about ride shares we can adopt as we get more into it."

Carnie adds, "Or potentially getting the VTA [Vineyard Transit Authority] on-board, or getting a young person to volunteer to drive, or putting it out to the people we know are coming: Would you be willing to carpool, or pick people up along the way, to help bring the food to people who need it, and not just bringing a beautiful dinner to people who already have access to a beautiful dinner?"

"We all need to come out into community in the dark months," says Carnie. "Especially older people. There's lots of kinds of needs that I think this is meeting."

The suppers seat about 60, and advance registration is required. Because it's free, you might be tempted to sign up and then not worry about being a no-show; please keep in mind that this prevents others from attending, so if you make a reservation, please show up to enjoy the bounty. MVT

Memory collages

Artists Emily Davis and Jennifer Langhammer will host a two-hour art-making session based on participants' personal memories. They will guide people through the process of evoking memory and translating it into a three-dimensional collage. These workshops are inspired by Emily's leaf-based collage work, and by Jennifer's "Significant Objects" ceramic sculpture series, which will be on view at Featherstone Center for the Arts in April, and ask participants to share a memory of an object that had meaning to them. All materials and tools will be provided. $15 to $40. (Please email info@stillpointmv.org if cost is a barrier.) 1 to 3 pm. Stillpoint, 20 Stillpoint Rd., West Tisbury.

Creating work that matters

Oscar-nominated documentary short films at the M.V. Film Center.

BY ABBY REMER

Each of the five Oscar-nominated documentary short films carries a punch. They are an important tribute to filmmakers' desire to create work that matters. The films screen at the Martha's Vineyard Film Center through March 15, along with the Oscar-nominated animated and live-action shorts programs.

Joshua Seftel's documentary "All the Empty Rooms" explores the impact of school shootings through a powerful project by veteran CBS news correspondent Steve Hartman and photographer Lou Bopp. As the number of shootings grew, Hartman decided to shift from heart-felt human-interest stories to a seven-year project focused on the impact of gun violence. He and Bopp highlight these tragedies by documenting the bedrooms of children who were killed. There is a silent, reverential air to the intimate photographs of stuffed animals, clothes left out, and hairbands around a doorknob. Parents explain that they leave everything untouched to preserve their children's scent and presence. Hartman notes that since starting the project in 1997, school shootings have increased from 17 to 132 annually. He says, "Before the project, I was growing more and more numb after each school shooting. All of America is going through the same process. Now when I hear about a school shooting, I can place myself in that room, and it hurts a lot more than it did before. I want the project to remind people that these could be your child."

Putting faces to the deaths of the unseen is also central in Hilla Medalia's "Children No More: Were and Are Gone." The film follows a group of women in Tel Aviv who began organizing a silent vigil in a public square in March 2025. A banner explains to those passing by that each protester is holding a candle and a poster with the picture of one of the 18,592 children killed in the war in Gaza. Every image has the child's name, age, date of death, and the words "WAS AND IS NO MORE." One of the organizers explains the group's dedication to a silent vigil and avoiding conflict: "The only way to make change is for people to look inward and understand something very, very dark is going on. And it goes against all the principles of humanity, of Judaism. Our goal is to awaken something inside." The organizers also speak about the importance of not giving in to the police effort to create tension between them and those demanding the return of the hostages and Israeli soldiers. Week after week, more people join the group, standing silently as some people pass by and look away, while others respond with denial, sorrow, or rage.

Christalyn Hampton and Geeta Gandbhir's "The Devil Is Busy" takes us into the heart of a women's health clinic in Atlanta, Ga. We meet Tracii, the determined head of security, at 6 am as she arrives to prepare the clinic, including checking behind closed doors for hidden intruders. We follow her throughout the day to ensure the safety of women seeking abortions, amid new restrictions and virulent protesters shouting outside. The pressure is immense, Tracii says: "This is a very high-stress situation. Any day you're not scheduled to go home from here, because you never know once people get in the building, what they may do." But Tracii's dedication to the cause and her deep religious beliefs sustain her: "I rely very heavily on my faith while I'm in here, because the devil is busy out there."

The film "Armed with Only a Camera: The Life and Death of Brent Renaud" is credited to Craig Renaud, along with his brother Brent. But as the title indicates, we know that Brent is no longer with us. The documentary highlights his lifelong commitment as a photojournalist to capturing the devastating human toll of conflicts worldwide, including in Somalia, Iraq, and Ukraine — where he was killed by Russian soldiers in 2022. As we follow Brent's body home, we see his final recordings from Ukraine and from other wars, as well as footage from the brothers' childhood in Arkansas, revealing their close relationship. The film is dedicated to Brent and all the devoted journalists who use their cameras to work for truth and understanding, including the more than 100 killed every year.

"Perfectly a Strangeness" by Alison McAlpine has a mystical quality. We follow three donkeys trekking through an anonymous desert. As the sun rises and the day unfolds, we hear the clip-clop of their hooves on the dirt and see the journey from their perspective. They soon come upon an enormous, abandoned astronomical observatory, which they, and thus we, explore with nary a human in sight. Although a documentary, "Perfectly a Strangeness" is a sensory, cinematic exploration in which we create our own narrative. MVR

All three Oscar shorts programs will screen intermittently through March 15 at the M.V. Film Center. Some of the documentary short films contain graphic war imagery, adult themes, and strong language. Recommended for viewers 17 and up.

Heard on Main Street: Smile when picking up the phone. The caller will hear it in your voice. Writing a list of things or people you're grateful for has been shown to benefit your mood and well-being. Research shows that those who experience more gratitude are happier. Try it — it works. I sit in my warm house watching what seem to be huge snowflakes falling outside. I think I mentioned the snow we have is not melting as fast as it ought to. But I have to admit, I have never seen snowflakes that seemed so big. Seeing the fresh snow is always a delight ... until it is not. When I had to have my lower drive plowed to give the gas company access, a wonderful team showed up.

It was certainly a team effort. The most difficult part was the entryway, where huge piles of solid snow had to be attacked with brute strength. It was my good fortune to have Sisco Family Services (508-560-3346) come to my rescue. And they are available for help in many ways. All are welcome to dance, or just to listen, at the Unitarian Universalist Society from 4 to 5:30 pm on Sunday, March 1. Local off-season music and dancing, with live music by Ellen Biskis and friends. Events will be held twice monthly, or more, at 238 Main St.

"In Winter all the singing is in the tops of the trees where the wind-bird with its white eyes shoves and pushes among the branches."

—Mary Oliver

Wind. Snow. Ice. Oddly warmish days. The hardy folks who work to keep our roads and driveways cleared are seeing their equipment and their bodies getting worn and cranky. During this school vacation time, those who could have left the Island seeking either warmer climates or mountains on which to ski. Those of us who are still here are bundling up, reading, creating, puzzling, making comfort food, clearing fallen tree limbs, getting by. I confess to liking this time. I like looking at the snowfall, and I like being in a world that looks sparkly and clean. I like driving on roads without another vehicle in sight. It is as if our little world is getting a rest, taking a breath before the work of spring begins in earnest. In addition to feeding our tummies, breaking bread with folks is a great way to meet your neighbors. This week the West Tisbury library is hosting free soup and bread lunch for all folks of any age who wish to partake. Drop by through Friday, Feb. 27, between 11:30 am and 1 pm to enjoy gluten-free, vegan, and alpha-gal-friendly deliciousness. The Up-Island Council on Aging is hosting its usual monthly lunch for seniors on the 25th. This one usually takes place in Aquinnah the last Wednesday of every month, but this month it will take place at the Chilmark Community Center.

Writing from the car as we drive to Las Vegas, Nev. — which means that yes, we are finally eastward-bound after a month on the road, and headed back home — someday. It seems that this has been the snowiest winter the Island has had, and I hope you fared well through it. It's also school vacation week, and I am sending all the parents and caregivers all the good wishes, and extra patience with their young ones this week. Due to the weather and the timing, it's a slow week on things to do in Edgartown, but there's a signature event happening, plus some town notices you should be aware of. Starting with this: The town of Edgartown seeks to fill the temporary position of part-time outreach worker for the Council on Aging. The position requires 12 to 18 hours a week, and responsibilities include maintaining contact with Edgartown older adults and facilitating access to services, transportation coordination, and other support and administrative functions. Application and full job description available at edgartown-ma.us. If you're a local Edgartown business, this is also the time to get your hiring posts across the board — whether online or in person — as we all know that the start of the season will arrive in the blink of an eye.

Chilmark

The final Sunday in February brought a blizzard. This week schools are closed, and many are off-Island. May they return safely with stories of their travels and funny adventures. Our power is out, trees are down, and it is still snowing and blowing and the woodstove is humming and warming a pot of water. It was a relief to wake up knowing I'd gotten up in the night and shoveled snow away from the storm door so we aren't trapped. The wind has blown drifts of snow halfway up the living room windows. The deep snow is not fun for my pup. In the hours before the snow started to fall, every seat was filled at the last Winter Table community supper at Stillpoint. Thank you, Willy Mason, Betsy Carnie, and Ben Robinson for conceiving this combination of music and meals created from imperfect-in-some-way ingredients donated by local farms and grocers.

"Both tears and sweat are salty, but they render a different result. Tears will get you sympathy; sweat will get you change."
—the Rev. Jesse Jackson, Oct. 8, 1941 – Feb. 17, 2026
February is ending with a bang, as I sit here on Sunday waiting for our first real Nor'easter in a few years. We've almost made it! Daylight saving is around the corner — clocks will spring ahead on March 8. Hang in there! I'll see you after we all dig out. The full moon rises on March 3; this one is called the Worm Moon. The name is for the earthworms that should be emerging as the ground thaws, and symbolizes awakening in nature, a time of growth and transformation. I don't know about you, but I am ready to transform out of winter clothing! Looking forward to stepping out the door in fewer than four layers. I wanted to tell you that I visited the island of St. John in the U.S. Virgin Islands at the beginning of the month. There are lots of connections between St. John and M.V.; I even ran into a few Islanders there! It is a stunningly beautiful island, with breathtaking beaches, very uncommercialized. The driving is not for the faint of heart — the roads are twisty rollercoasters! I will go back — but maybe use taxis next time!

Another weekend preparing for a snow-storm. Soup made. Wood in. Wheelbarrows full outside the dining room door. Snow shovels on the porches. Flashlights. Candles. Matches. Books. Water. Mike went off to the fire station for the night, one of a group of firemen assigned to be ready if there is an emergency. I hope that it will be a quiet night. Shirley Howell was buried in the Chilmark cemetery on Saturday morning. Rev. Baker had barely begun the service when someone's dog leaned on the horn in his car. Shirley loved dogs, and she would have laughed along with all of us. It felt like she was there. There was a gathering afterwards at the Howes

House. When we left, I went across the street to see the tribute that Shirley's daughters had set up on the bench on Alley's porch. There was a photograph, a lovely bouquet, and a note naming members of the group who had died over the past few years: Shirley Howell, Jennie Greene, Ellen Weiss, Tony Rezendes, John Alley, Cliff Athearn, Jennie Gadowski is planning a permanent plaque memorializing the group. Meeting on that bench was a big part of their day.

SHINE NEWS

A New Volunteer Opportunity Awaits!

The Cape Cod & Islands Regional SHINE Program is now recruiting volunteers for our 2026 training class. No prior experience with health insurance is required—we provide comprehensive screening, training, and certification so you can become a Medicare expert.

As a SHINE volunteer, you can make a real difference by:

- Counseling individuals one-on-one
- Speaking to community groups
- Providing office support

We'll help you find the role that fits your skills and interests. All you need is integrity, a willingness to learn, and a desire to help others.

Medicare can be confusing. If you've navigated the enrollment process yourself, you know how challenging it can be. Now, you can guide others through their first enrollment, help them compare plan options, or troubleshoot issues.

Join the SHINE team and become a trusted resource in your community!

You know your community and neighbors best, that's why your involvement matters. SHINE volunteers are highly trained and certified to assist with:

- Original Medicare (Parts A and B)
- Medicare Advantage (Part C)
- Prescription drug coverage (Part D)
- Medicare Supplement (Medigap)
- Programs that help reduce health-care costs

Make a meaningful impact. Become a SHINE volunteer today!

Please call the Cape Cod and Islands regional SHINE program manager, Kristina Whiton-O'Brien, at 508-375-6762, and choose option 2 to sign up! Applications will be due in April. Class begins in May.

- Dementia coaching, to make home life easier
- Support groups, for both caregivers and those experiencing early memory loss
- Resources and education, to remove stigma and learn strategies

The Supportive Day Program (SDP)

Space available, call today!
SDP is a daily program for older adults who may experience memory challenges or disability. Enriching activities and a family-style lunch create a day of community engagement, purpose, and meaning. Equally important is the respite provided for caregivers. When a caregiver has time for rest and self-care, the quality of life for both the caregiver and care recipient improves. Call Stacey Northrop (ext. 102) to learn about registration.

Respite Innovations

Respite Innovations brings person-centered engagement into the home, and affords caregivers time to take care of themselves. Call Ann Baird at MVCL if you are a caregiver who would benefit from a break! This program is also welcoming volunteers at this time. Please call Ann at 508-939-9440, ext. 105, for more information.

Resources and education

The Family Caregiver Support Program advocates for caregivers, providing memory screenings, family meeting facilitation, ongoing Alzheimer's and dementia education, and referrals to programs that can support your caregiving efforts. Our services at MVCL provide meaningful tools and tips for a better caregiving experience. We support any caregiver living on Martha's Vineyard, or who is caring from afar for someone living here.

Caregiver counseling

We can help you navigate the system of public and private care for the best plan to meet your needs. Consultation can be provided in the home, at our office, or over the phone. We can meet with caregivers individually or as a family.

Dementia Friends

Dementia Friends USA is part of a global movement that is changing the way people think, act, and talk about dementia. By providing a free, one-hour Dementia Friends Information Session for your staff, you are helping the community better serve our neighbors. Contact Mary Holmes, Dementia Friends champion, at maryh@mcvcenter4living.org or 508-939-9440 to arrange a free session today!

HEALTHY AGING MARTHA'S VINEYARD

Cindy Trish, Executive director • 508-693-7900, ext. 455

Finding Your Balance this spring

As winter lingers on Martha's Vineyard, many of us are still navigating icy walkways, bulky boots, and the realities that come with colder weather. This season is a good reminder of how important balance, strength, and confidence are as we move through our daily lives, especially for older adults.

Healthy Aging Martha's Vineyard is pleased to offer a new session of Matter of Balance, an evidence-based falls prevention program designed to help older adults stay active, independent, and confident. Falls remain a leading cause of injury-related death among older adults, and many of us know someone whose life was significantly impacted by a fall. Just as important, the fear of falling again can limit activity and social connection, even long after an injury has healed.

Matter of Balance addresses both the physical and emotional aspects of fall prevention. Through education, discussion, and gentle exercises, participants learn practical strategies to reduce fall risk, improve balance and stability, and build confidence in everyday movement. The program also offers something equally valuable: the opportunity to connect with peers in a supportive, social setting.

Classes begin Tuesday, May 5, and meet weekly on Tuesdays from 2 to 3:30 pm for eight weeks, running through June. Sessions will be held at the Oak Bluffs Council on Aging. To register, simply contact any Council on Aging on the Island, and staff will assist with enrollment.

Staying active, informed, and connected is key to aging well. Programs like Matter of Balance are one way Healthy Aging Martha's Vineyard continues to support older adults in maintaining safety, confidence, and quality of life, no matter the season.

{ ISLANDERS
WRITE }

Shelf space — would that be called “shelf estate”? — for local authors in both Vineyard bookstores has expanded in the past two decades, in large part due to the fact that there are even more ways to get a book published now. Books that are self-published, published through hybrid presses, or through boutique, independent, niche, academic, or micro presses, are nudging into spaces that were once commanded by traditional publishers, which is why 30 or so years ago, the answer to the question, “How do I get a book published?” was a lot more straightforward than it is today.

More books by local authors means there are more authors on the Island in March with stories about how they got published, and what they learned on the path to publication. Over the weekend of March 14 and 15, Islanders Write and Edgartown Books are joining forces at Featherstone Center for the Arts to both celebrate Island authors and hear some of their stories.

After a day of writing workshops on Saturday, March 14 (see schedule online at islanderswrite.com), we invite everyone to meet and chat with Island authors for a Vineyard Authors Book Fair from 5 to 7 pm. As of now, we know of more than 30 authors (that’s right!) who will be on hand signing their books, and ready to engage in conversations about the art, craft, and business of writing.

The list of authors as of this writing — which is a week before you will be reading this story — includes John Abrams, Justen Ahren, Nancy Slonim Aronie, Morgan Baker, Norman Birnbach, Julia Blanter, Tom Dresser, Marc Favreau, Kate Feiffer, Noel Foy, Judith Hannan, Carole Hopson, Benita Jane, Woessner, and Gerry Yukevich (Ivan Cox).

Then, on Sunday, March 15, starting at 10 am, we will be speaking with authors and publishing professionals about the path to publication. Join us again at Featherstone to hear their stories. (Please note, this is a brown-bag lunch event; there will not be food for nected with the History Press, and what it’s been like working with them.

10:45 am: Jennifer Smith Turner published her 2020 novel with a hybrid publisher at the start of the pandemic. She will discuss what she learned, and what’s memoir, but couldn’t find a publisher for it, so she did a workaround and found a publisher who was interested in a book on how to write a memoir. Having figured out a way in, she followed up with a book on writing essays to get some of the amazing essays that came out of the Chilmark Writing Workshop published.

12:15 pm: John Abrams is an author, entrepreneur, and community activist.

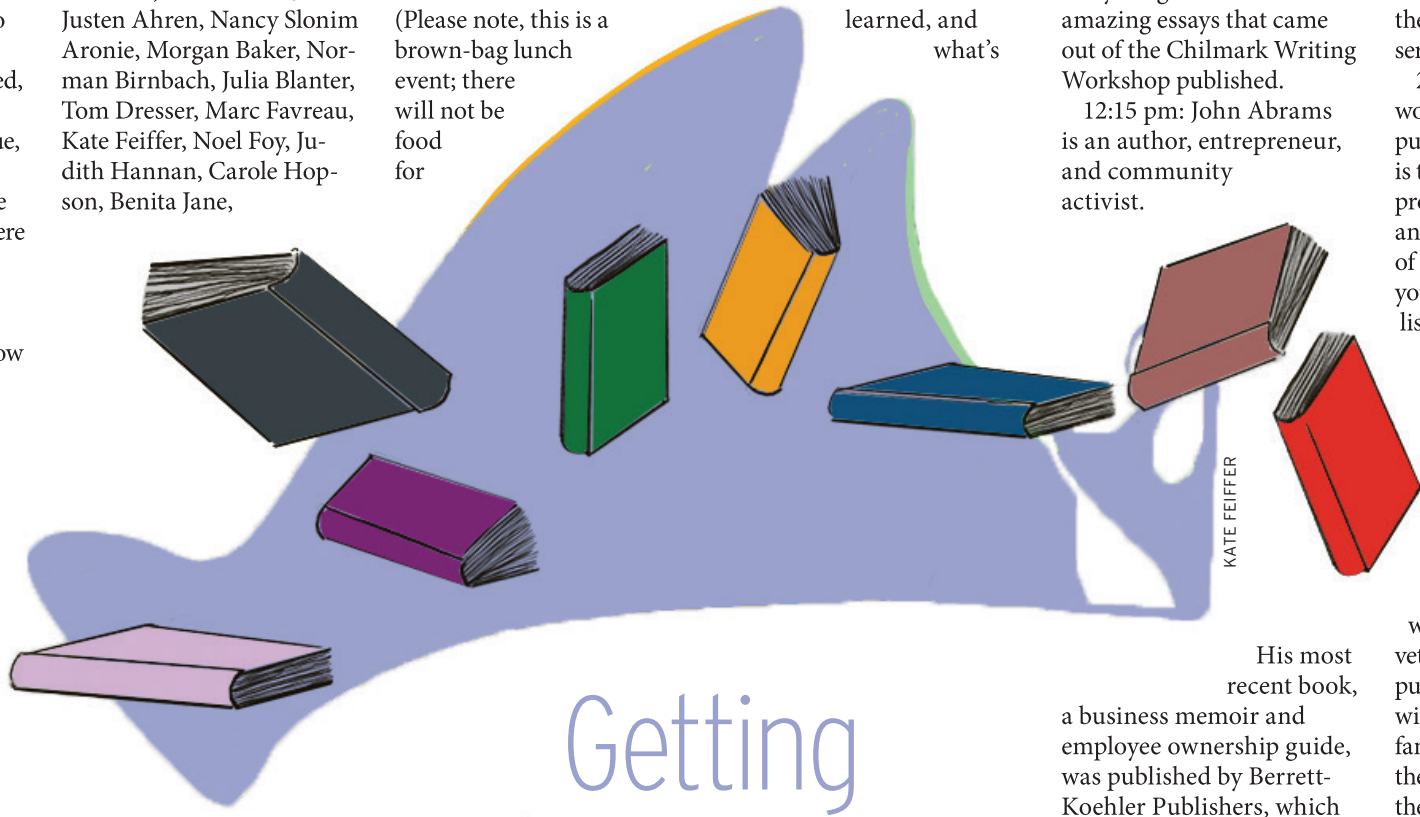

Hopson’s story is inspiring, as are her attitude and innovative ideas.

1:30 pm: Rosemary Stimola is a highly regarded literary agent, primarily of children’s and young adult books. Stimola will talk about getting an agent, using an agent, and the trends she’s currently observing in the industry.

2:15 pm: Marc Favreau works on both sides of the publishing industry. He is the director of editorial programs at the New Press, and is the acclaimed author of five nonfiction books for young adults that were published by Little Brown.

3 pm: Charles Sennott comes from a family of storytellers, and wanted to be sure his mother’s life story was preserved for her children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, and future generations. Sennott, who is a best-selling author, veteran journalist, and the publisher of The MV Times, will discuss how he rallied his family to come together for the project, and explain what they did and how to work with family members to write and publish a book about your loved one’s life. MVT

Writing From The Heart

Making peace with mortality.

The life-or-death decision

The night before I left for Boston to have open-heart surgery, I roasted the best batch of sunflower seeds I had ever roasted. None of them were burnt. All of them were evenly browned. And as I was scooping them into the jar, I had a funny thought: What if I never get to eat these? And they’re the best ones I’ve ever made.

It’s really the first thought I had of the actual possibility of my dying.

That’s not exactly true. I had forced myself a few times that week to memorize things and places as if I would never see them again. But I couldn’t take myself seriously. I knew I was doing it so I could write about it later. I actually (at least as far as my conscious mind goes) had not considered that I might die on the table. It seemed that people around me were acting as if this were a probability (even more than a possibility) and that my impending surgery was way more serious than I was taking it.

A few days before I left for Mass General, I was walking carefully in Aquinnah. Carefully because they had told me that, with this aneurysm on my aorta, I was a ticking time bomb and shouldn’t do anything strenuous. A few close friends joked: No problem, she doesn’t do anything strenuous in the first place. I love that people know me.

Anyway, walking — ambling, really — I made myself think about my death, and it felt very possible and very safe. Emmanuel, Ram Dass’ disembodied friend, said death is like taking off a tight shoe.

I know what a tight shoe feels like. When you take it off, it’s a huge relief. So I thought, Relief for whom? And then I thought, Maybe I should go deeper with this.

And when I did, it was surprising how easily I made peace with dying.

I felt as if I had done absolutely everything I ever wanted to do. And I understood exactly what my sister, Margie, meant when she refused any cancer meds, saying she was ready for the next adventure. But then I thought, Am I really ready? I love living and want to keep on doing it. But if it ended, I’d also be fine. I have no bucket list. I have left nothing undone.

So I made myself think about what it would be like to the best husband in the world and the sweetest son on the planet? And my friends who know me so well.

And that was it. Somehow I knew — and I don’t know where this comes from — but I knew with total certainty that I would be in charge of whether I lived or died, and that I wouldn’t let my loved ones suffer. So right there in Aquinnah I made my decision.

Now I know some religious people, and I am

Choosing life was definitely the harder path, because the longer you live, the more aches, the more losses, the more sorrows.

die on the table. (That’s a funny phrase right there, but this is a serious piece, so table that. Ha, ha.) When I made myself consider dying, I also thought how amazing it would be to see my mom and my sister and Dan and my father. I thought about the tunnel and the white light and how all of my ancestors would be beckoning me to come, and how it would feel so incredibly loving, and how hard it would be to choose life. But then my next immediate thought was: What about Joel and Josh, actually one of them, but I’m not one who would take issue with that. Only God decides if you live or die, they would say. But in Judaism, you are God, or at least a divine spark of God, and I knew that that spark could be the deciding factor. And I had just made my decision right on Light-house Road (how do you like that for a metaphor?).

Instead of “Happy birthday,” Vietnamese monk and peace activist Thich Nhat Han would say,

“The Simpsons.” Or maybe I could start doing some activities that my friends, who I love for knowing me so well, could call strenuous.

Who knows? Next time you’re in aisle three at Cronig’s, you might see me doing some upper-body weight training. Lifting the balsamic vinegar with one hand and a big bag of gluten-free pancake mix.

Or maybe selling my special, healing, roasted-with-love sunflower seeds. Then you’ll know I’m back. MVT

Digging out of the aftermath

snowblowers to continue digging themselves out of the blizzard amid fallen trees, with driveways barricaded by mounds of snow, and they do so despite sustained power outages. Nearly 3,000 people were still without power on the Island Wednesday morning, and while a state of emergency is still in effect for Dukes County, the non-emergency travel ban was lifted on Tuesday.

First responders, public works personnel, and power crews have been working tirelessly for days to tackle the barrage of tasks, from clearing debris to responding to emergency calls. On Wednesday on Beach Road, police could be seen rushing past with lights flashing, and ambulances were racing to and from the hospital.

Tisbury Fire Chief Patrick Rolston said there had been a number of calls related to medical issues or carbon monoxide buildup during the blizzard, which Rolston said are common during snowstorms. He said homeowners should clear vents for heaters and boilers to prevent carbon monoxide buildup. People who use mini-split heat pumps should also clear snow from the outdoor unit for efficient heating of the home.

While the main roads have been looking “pretty solid,” Rolston said the biggest hindrance has been the smaller roadways that haven’t been cleared of snow yet. He recommended people shovel out enough of their driveway so emergency responders can reach them if needed.

From downed live wires to fallen trees to snapped poles, some roads are impassable across the Island.

Edgartown Police Chief Chris Dolby, who had been up for around 48 hours as of Tuesday evening, asked Islanders not to ignore when certain roads have been blocked off, because that means there’s a hazardous condition in the area, such as a live wire.

“We’re not clear of it just yet, but a lot of progress was made today,” Dolby said.

Additionally, Dolby said that while the Island isn’t expected to see a “deep freeze,” people should keep water dripping to prevent frozen pipes.

In a weather alert issued to its staff and patients Monday evening, Martha’s Vineyard Hospital also stated it would be open on Tuesday, although some capacities would be delayed or limited, such as the outpatient rehab being closed, and surgeries being “handled on a case-by-case basis.”

The Massachusetts Emergency Management Agency has also provided post-storm safety tips:

Stay informed and stay away from hazards:

- Continue to monitor media for emergency information.
- Follow instructions from public safety officials.
- Call 911 to report emergencies, including downed power lines and gas leaks.

• Check with your local authorities or call 211 to find locations of warming centers or shelters near you, or for other storm-related questions.

• Report power outages to your utility company. For the Island, this is Eversource.

• Stay away from downed utility wires. Always assume a downed power line is live.

• Stay off streets and roads until they are clear of snow.

Clear snow:

• Use caution and take frequent breaks when shoveling snow to prevent overexertion. Overexertion can bring on a heart attack, a major cause of death in the winter.

• Dig out fire hydrants and storm drains in your neighborhood.

• Clear snow from the sidewalk on your property, including nearby curb cuts, to allow access for wheelchair users. Regulations and requirements for homeowners and businesses to clear sidewalks vary by community, but the agency asks people to “clear sidewalks to make safe travel for all,” even if it isn’t mandated.

• Property owners and businesses should clear snow from walkways, entrances, and access ramps, and handicapped parking spots, and may be required to do so.

• Check your roof, and clear accumulated snow to avoid roof collapses.

Avoid carbon monoxide poisoning:

• Clear exhaust vents from direct-vent gas furnace systems to avoid carbon monoxide poisoning, and make sure your carbon monoxide detector is working. The agency described carbon monoxide as a “silent, odorless killer.”

• Clear snow from around vehicle exhaust pipes before starting the vehicle to avoid carbon monoxide poisoning.

• Make sure emergency generators or secondary heating systems are well-ventilated, because their fumes contain carbon monoxide. Generator safety tips provided by the Department of Fire Services can be found at bit.ly/4tLTL4W.

Take care of each other:

• Don’t park too close to corners, so public safety vehicles and plows can maneuver safely.

• Be aware of children playing in the streets, particularly climbing on or running out from behind large snowdrifts. Parents should remind their children to be aware of plowing operations and traffic.

• Check on family, friends, and neighbors, especially the elderly, those who live alone, those with medical conditions, and those who may need additional assistance. MVT highlighted in a press release Tuesday that more than 67 complaints had been sent to the attorney general’s office over the failure of AmeriGas and Superior Plus Propane to deliver gas, and allowing tanks to “reach dangerously low levels or run empty.” While AmeriGas delivers to the Island, Superior Plus does not; the company acquired assets of Rymes Propane and Oil in 2020 in all places but Martha’s Vineyard.

State attorney general calls out AmeriGas

“Gas companies have an obligation to deliver the services they promise on time and reliably. Leaving households without heat or hot water during the cold winter months after requiring customers to rely on them exclusively for this service is both dangerous and unacceptable,” Campbell said. “AmeriGas and Superior Plus Propane must immediately fix the problems that have left consumers with empty or nearly empty gas tanks this heating season.”

Demand letters were sent Tuesday to the gas companies that said customers reported that “the companies locked them into exclusive contracts then failed to deliver propane, leaving households without heat or hot water and unable to turn to another provider in case of an emergency.” Customers also reported that there were “unreasonable wait times,” and that even when they reached company representatives, issues were often left unresolved. The letters demand that the companies remedy the problems and “ensure timely and adequate delivery of propane ... without further disruption,” the press release said.

The Times reported about two weeks ago that homeowners on the Island experienced days of cold temperatures due to delivery delays from AmeriGas. Kathryn Leonard, a seasonal resident in Vineyard Haven, was one customer who took her concerns to the attorney general as the Island experienced heavy snowfall and a long cold snap in late January and February.

“Due to the recent extreme winter conditions across a large portion of the country, AmeriGas has undertaken extraordinary efforts to ensure we keep our customers safe and warm,” said AmeriGas Group Director of Inside Sales and Customer Relations Bryllyn Johnson in an email to The Times in early February. “We are servicing more customers this year than last, and have performed better in delivery operations during colder than normal weather periods, compared to previous years.” Johnson added that customers should maintain clear delivery paths and remove snow, ice, and branches for 10 feet of clearance for delivery vehicles.

or isolated areas, and have limited financial resources,” Campbell’s demand letter to AmeriGas reads. “Leaving them without home heat for days or weeks at a time is dangerous, unconscionable, and unacceptable.” The letter also said “failure to deliver propane as promised” could be in violation of state laws.

The letter asks that the company provide “written documentation” of efforts to resolve issues by Tuesday, March 3, and go to the attorney general’s office to discuss those efforts.

“We received the attorney general’s request and are still reviewing that,” a spokesperson for AmeriGas said in an email to The Times Wednesday. The company also shared an email sent to customers on Martha’s Vineyard by territory manager Kerry Simmons that said, “Safety is the core of everything we do, and the trust and well-being of the people and communities we serve is not taken lightly. AmeriGas is making sustainable improvements to the service we provide our customers, and we’re committed to being transparent with you along the way.”

The email to customers said that delays were a result of days the company was unable to deploy trucks due to bad road conditions, and added that even when roads are navigable, they may not be able to access a clear path to tanks that are covered by snow and ice. There have been 246 “zero fill” stops where they couldn’t complete delivery from Feb. 1 to Feb. 24, Simmons wrote; however, in the week of Feb. 2, 134,000 gallons were delivered to 650 customers. The next week, 144,000 gallons were delivered to 600 customers. There is also a dedicated number for Martha’s Vineyard customers to talk to a local employee: 774-563-6644.

People who experience issues are encouraged to file a complaint with the attorney general’s office. The attorney general’s office also stated, “Consumers who need immediate assistance because they are suffering from a lack of heat should call their propane company and the AGO’s consumer hotline at 617-727-8400.” MVT of '78, with 37.9 inches at T.F. Green International Airport in Warwick, R.I., according to the National Weather Service.

Some conservative estimates put the snowfall in West Tisbury at only 20 inches, and dependent on drifts and other factors, some accumulations are significantly higher up-Island at 24 inches. New Bedford, just across the Vineyard Sound and Buzzards Bay, saw the largest snowfall in the city's history with 37 inches, or more than three feet of snow.

"This is a really bad storm. You know, I was 7 years old in the blizzard of '78. I can't compare exactly, because everything was big in my eyes ... But I can tell you this is as bad as I've seen it," Gov. Maura Healey said in a press conference Monday.

The blizzard of '78 caught many unaware when forecast technology and information dissemination weren't as good as today.

This blizzard was uniquely brutal because the storm came on the heels of a late January snowstorm, the aftermath of which still covered sidewalks and backroads. Now new, heavy snow covers gray slush that was hardened by a February cold snap.

Across the state, nearly 300,000 lost power, a majority of whom were on the Cape, Islands, and South Coast. Hurricane-force winds reached 80 miles per hour in some areas, and heavy snow downed trees and power lines. The winds and snowfall were so vicious that one Islander described the sensation as pinpricks on her face; conditions were nearly intolerable, and required goggles to withstand. A travel ban was in effect in some counties, where whiteout conditions brought visibility down to zero.

On Monday, more than 4,000 customers didn't have power in Oak Bluffs, and in Edgartown, there were nearly 2,500 outages. Damage was reported by Eversource, the Island's utility company, as early as 3:30 am Monday.

Olessa Stepanova, a spokesperson for Eversource, said that 85 to 90 percent of the outages were on the Cape and Islands, and text blasts Monday from the utility company said that the blizzard conditions caused "monumental damage to the electrical system" on the Cape, Martha's Vineyard, and Nantucket. Some parts of the Cape, such as Provincetown, were out completely.

Power restoration is a multi-day effort. And for a storm of this strength, Eversource estimated a handful of customers wouldn't have power for three to five days. Though some power can be restored remotely, Eversource crews had to wait for winds to die down, because they can't be out in bucket trucks in winds more than 35 miles per hour. Snow also covered power lines and cables, and continued to make work difficult Tuesday.

Though Eversource prepared for this "power nor'easter" and expected high winds, wet snow, and tree-related damage, and so pre-staged crews in coastal towns like those in the Cape and Islands, Stepanova said that this storm was rare.

"We haven't had a storm like this in years," Stepanova said. "The last time we have anything like this on record that had this many outages and these types of conditions was in 2022." The winter storm in late January had snow that was light and fluffy, and didn't cause remotely this much damage to trees or power lines on the Island. Winds in last month's storm were also not nearly as strong.

Whiteout conditions in Oak Bluffs Monday.

Island businesses and municipal facilities were closed for days, and public transportation services like the Steamship Authority and the Vineyard Transit Authority were forced to suspend trips. No one went anywhere Monday — no one except first responders, highway departments, and other personnel who worked to aid emergency calls and clear the roads.

Transportation to and from the Island was still somewhat thwarted Tuesday after all boats were canceled Monday. The Steamship Authority was forced to cancel early trips Tuesday because crew members were unable to get out from under the snow and to work. The ferry line also canceled some trips in the afternoon due to "weather conditions," as the MV Martha's Vineyard was the only vessel that could run the Woods Hole–Martha's Vineyard route. The bus system partially ran Tuesday, but road conditions forced the Vineyard Transit Authority to cancel multiple routes and delay others.

Steve Bernier, the proprietor of Cronig's for more than 40 years, and current owner and chief executive Andrea Donnelly closed their grocery stores Monday. Bernier doesn't remember another time the stores were forced to close; even when Hurricane Bob hit in 1991, Cronig's managed to open for part of the day. Bernier is also the owner of The Martha's Vineyard Times.

Bernier added, "Just plowing the parking lot is challenging, as there is nowhere to put all the snow, and when cleared, it is drifting back ... We also can't endanger our employees, and so this is an extraordinary circumstance." He added that the supply chain up and down the entire Northeast was paralyzed, and disruptions would probably last for at least several days.

Other food stores, namely Stop & Shop in Edgartown and Vineyard Haven, were open, but didn't have power, so only shelf-stable products could be sold earlier this week. The pharmacy at the Edgartown Triangle was also closed Tuesday because of a power outage.

A travel ban that carried a $500 fine was issued for Dukes County by Gov. Healey's office at around 6 pm Monday. It was lifted by noon the next day, but a state of emergency, initially issued Sunday, was still in effect as of noon Wednesday for the county.

Gov. Healey also deployed 350 members of the Massachusetts National Guard to support storm recovery across the state, and Eversource rerouted crews from Western Massachusetts and New Hampshire to the Cape and Southeastern Massachusetts.

By noon on Tuesday, there were still 220,000 outages in the state; out-of-state resources arrived across the Cape and Islands and the South Coast late Monday and throughout Tuesday. Stepanova said 2,000 crews — line, tree, service, and operational personnel — worked to restore power, and many traveled to the hardest-hit areas, Barnstable, Dukes, Plymouth, and Bristol counties.

"We have Mother Nature cooperating with us today, so we are doing the best that we can. Step one is getting out there and assessing the damage, so that's what we've been doing a lot of today, is getting out there, doing damage assessment, figuring out exactly where our crews need to prioritize," Stepanova said Tuesday.

Part of the problem was that many areas had high snow banks that buried wires and cables that prohibited quicker work. As of Wednesday around noon, around 160,000 people still didn't have power across the state.

"We expect nearly all our customers affected by the storm will have power back by end of day Friday, with the vast majority of our customers restored sooner," a Facebook post from Eversource said Tuesday. "We'll continue working around the clock to get the job done."

Power outages by town, as of Wednesday, Feb. 25 at 12:25 pm:

- Edgartown:
75 customers (16 percent)
- Oak Bluffs:
785 customers (17 percent)
- Tisbury:
260 customers (7 percent)
- West Tisbury:
75 customers (2 percent)
- Chilmark:
131 customers (7 percent)
- Aquinnah:
3 customers (1 percent)

ISO New England, a non-profit corporation that manages the grid for the six New England states, remained reliable throughout the blizzard, ISO spokesperson Mary Cate Colapietro said. "There were outages on the lower-voltage distribution system managed by local utilities, not the ISO, where equipment can be impacted by heavy snow or downed trees," she added. Peak demand on Sunday and Monday topped off at 17,209 megawatt-hours, which is well below what the grid saw in the late January storm that closed schools, roads and businesses. MVT

Islanders make the most of record snowfall

While the storm felled power lines and piled snow across doorways, locals kept moving.

BY SARAH SHAW DAWSON

The sun glinted off white snow, with bright orange and blue toboggans stark against a steep hill that for generations has been used by Islanders for one primary wintertime purpose: sledding.

Six-year-old Lucca Sornas and 10-year-old Alistair Zieman trudged up a barely made path midday on Tuesday with their sleds in tow. Sornas used a kayak oar to keep himself upright. The snow was almost up to his shoulders in the deepest points.

“Let’s do the train!” Sornas yelled out to his new friend as he tried to keep up.

The “train” was a sled game they had come up with, where Zieman put the rope for Sornas’ sled around his waist and they went down the hill together. Their goal was to land the jump midslide.

This week was not only one of the largest snowstorms the Island has seen in years, it’s also winter break for students.

“It’s hard to stay home with a 6-year-old,” Elaine Sornas, Lucca’s mother, said with a laugh as she watched her son slide, then tumble-roll down the hill with his friend. “He was excited to go out after the snow.”

While many locals were forced to stay home with no power, snow piled in wavy dunes on their cars and trees

“Being away was amazing, but it caused a lot of anxiety and nervousness,” Houghton told The Times, “and [I have] such gratitude for the people who were there, because with the power out, you couldn’t see what was going on.”

She read articles from the local papers, and checked the many local webcams, like the livestreams of Five Corners and the Chappy Ferry, for any indication of what was occurring back home. But when the webcam footage went out, she felt blinded by lack of information.

blocking their roads, others braved the elements.

And some were out just doing their jobs.

John Donnell, who works for excavation contractor Richard T. Olsen and Son, was tasked with snow removal for municipal and school buildings in West Tisbury.

“Today, we started at 5 am. We started at 10 on Sunday night, and were on all night,” Donnell yelled out of his truck window while he worked on Tuesday afternoon. “We’ve had crews out ever since the storm started.”

Donnell drove a large truck with a massive bed as his colleague Justin Smith hauled snow from a dump truck into Donnell’s vehicle. The weight of the snow jostled the work truck as it hit the bed.

When asked how this storm compared with the other the Island experienced in late January, Donnell said, “This one is way worse.” This was largely due to the many trees that had fallen, blocking roads and downing power lines.

While many restaurants, retail shops, and municipal buildings remained closed due to snow blockages or power outages, sparse storefronts started to slowly open their doors early Tuesday morning. Some essential stores and gas stations swung their doors out onto the snow-smearred sidewalks and welcomed in Islanders.

The West Tisbury library and Martha’s Vineyard Museum were opened as warming centers for unhoused Islanders or those who needed a heated place to be due to Island-wide power outages.

“The West Tisbury emergency warming center at the West Tisbury library was open for 15 continuous hours,” Jennelle Gadowski, Dukes County Emergency Management Association public information officer, said. “We had residents from all across the Island come to our shelter.”

Gadowski said emergency services and Harbor Homes, the Island’s only unhoused shelter, “joined forces and helped shelter people who needed it,” and that there were a dozen volunteers and more than 50 clients in the warming center.

“It was really amazing to see the community come together and support each other,” she added.

Support came through in different ways during the storm, much like how the depth of snow varied from place to place. Some Islanders were on vacation for February school break and had to completely rely on their neighbors to keep their home safe.

Amy Houghton, the chair of the Martha’s Vineyard Regional High School Committee, is on a family trip, and while she’s experiencing sunny skies, she said it was extremely worrisome to watch from afar as snow piled on the Vineyard and trees fell.

All Houghton knew at that point, she said, was “we had two trees down in our yard and no power.”

So she called on her neighbors. And they showed up. They dripped her faucets, made sure the trees weren’t causing any significant damage, and ensured that Houghton and her family could vacation a bit more peacefully.

“I’m thankful for all the hard work that was done there, and for all of the people who helped us to not feel so anxious about the house,” Houghton said.

The willingness to help and show up for others is as incredible as it is classic Vineyard, and, she said, is a “reflection of the community.” MVT
